Roy A. Haynes, United States prohibition commissioner, declared here today, that it is almost impossible for the drinker to obtain anything but "poisonous, doctored stuff." The Federal dry law is being enforced with greater success than was ever conceived possible within thirty months, he told the Wisconsin law enforcement convention. "Real bonded liquor is almost impossible to obtain," he declared. He said the "gilded open saloon" is a thing of the past, and that even the enemies of prohibition admitted that it is gone forever.

A CHRONICLE OF EVENTS WITH SIDE LIGHTS ON THE MEN AND WOMEN WHO MAKE UP WASHINGTON'S COMPLEX AND INTERESTING SOCIAL LIFE

THE PRESIDENT AND MRS. HARDING have been entertaining at the White House for a day or two Mrs. John Gordon Battelle, of Columbus, Ohio, who left yesterday for her home.

The little visit was a graceful attention to Mrs. Battelle in appreciation of the awkward predicament in which she was placed last Sunday when the President at the last moment was unable to attend the dedication ceremonies of the National Women's Party. It had been at Mrs. Battelle's instance that he accepted the invitation originally and she was, also, the recipient of his sudden regrets. Mrs. Battelle, who is chairman of the Republican women's committee of Ohio, is also chairman of the Ohio branch of the National Women's Party and was in charge of the arrangements for the dedicatory ceremonies from which the President was so conspicuously absent.

FRIENDS of the former British ambassador to the United States, Sir H. Mortimer Durand, have received recently copies of a delightful little volume of which he is the author. Sir Mortimer, it will be remembered, was ambassador here during the administration of President Roosevelt. The book is entitled "The Thirteenth Hussars in the World War." In that famous British cavalry regiment, whose traditions run back to Napoleonic times, Sir Mortimer once was a dashing officer. Its long war record includes participation in the charge of the Light Brigade at Balaklava, immortalized by Tennyson and several generations of American schoolboys. The object of the former ambassador's book is to say a word for the cavalry arm of the military service and to stress the point that its usefulness is by no means at an end. The Thirteenth Hussars rendered yeoman service in the Mesopotamian campaign in 1917 and 1918.

THE secret of Secretary Hoover's little Sunday excursions into the forest deep around Washington has just leaked out. The object of these little trips, it would seem, has been dam building. The Secretary of Commerce is accustomed of a Sunday to drum together a coterie of comrades and conduct them to one of the forest fastnesses within an hour's automobile drive of Washington. There they will presently discover they have been brought to join Engineer Hoover in the execution of miniature Colorado river reclamation projects. Clad in khaki knickerbockers, flannel shirt and campaign hat, Hoover will pass whole hours damming up rivulets and streams and working out imaginary drainage areas destined to fructify a continent. Some of his buddies will tell you that the inwardness of Hoover's dam-building hobby is his theory that even pleasures and pastimes ought to be constructive in nature if they are to be catalogued as enjoyment.
